Upcoming Cabinet
Nominees Must Adhere to the Constitution
(In service to all Americans)

One of the first things an incoming President of the United States needs to do is to nominate members of his or her Cabinet. The Cabinet includes the Vice President and the heads of 15 executive departments.

The members of the President's Cabinet advise the President on all important problems the Office and the President must face. They also lead the departments for the Executive Branch of our government. As appointed officers heading federal agencies, these Cabinet Secretaries are bureaucrats with full administrative control over their respective departments. Many Americans, UUs included, express concern that incoming executive Cabinet nominees are not qualified to perform their duties and, in particular, will not respect our Constitution nor their duty to uphold it.

The Senate must approve the men and women the President appoints before they can take office. It is imperative that all government officials and employees who take an oath to defend the Constitution do so in service of all Americans.
